INDEX, REPORTS, CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

1866-1912.

Each engineering district reviewed the proofs of the matter in Vol. I of this Index, pages 23-1692, pertaining to its own reports or works; upon a second opportunity to make such a review the matter incorporated under the heading above was received, but too late for incorporation in the first volume.

DISTRICTS AND DIVISIONS, AND OFFICES, ETC.

The boundaries of these may change according to the exigencies of the work under the care of the Corps of Engineers. See below.

REFERENCES.

(Page 15.)

Sometimes the text, pages 1 to 1791, refers to H. D. 482, 55th Cong., 2d, and sometimes to H. D. 421, 57th Cong., 2d. These are practically the same, the one of later date embracing the facts up to that later date. (H. D. 1491, 63d, 3d is the latest edition, and so more embracive than the others named above.)

ORDER OF ARRANGEMENT OF WATERWAY GROUPS, AND UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICES.

The waterways of the United States, as listed in Volume I, are arranged in sequential geographical groups. Usually these groups correspond with the areas in the care of the local United States Engineer office in charge of works of defense and of improvements on waterways. Sometimes, for various reasons, the limits or area under the care of a United States Engineer office may be changed, so that waterway improvements in one or more of the groups named in Volume I may be under the care of an office other than named in Volume I. This fact may be particularly noticeable in the case of waterways which begin or end any list of waterways in Volume I.

Any request for information concerning a waterway, addressed to the United States Engineer Office deemed to be in charge of the waterway concerned, would, usually, be forwarded direct to the United States Engineer Office actually in charge.

PART VII

CONSOLIDATED FINDING LIST

VOLS. I AND II

United States Rivers and Harbors, Fortifications,
Bridges, Wrecks, and all other data in Pages 1-2846 of this Index

ALPHABETICAL FINDING LIST.

NOTE.

The following list is, in the main, an alphabetical arrangement of the names of the waterways, harbors, or places of the United States, as found in Vols. I and II of this Index, with the addition of special references to data relating to fortifications, bridges, wreck removal, harbor lines, etc., as found in the two volumes of this Index. The names of special subjects found in the two volumes are also listed.

Each name is usually followed by (a) the district letter, (b) the district number of the waterway, and (c) the page number of this Index whereon further information concerning the subject is found.

This finding list does not contain references to special points embraced by a waterway, except in a few instances; as, for example, the instances of the Ohio, Missouri, Mississippi, and the Columbia. The abstracts concerning these waterways have their own indexes, and in this finding list the page reference is to the page of this Index whereon the special index contains the waterway or waterway point name listed herein. A star (*) follows the page reference in all these cases.

The Index has, as far as practicable, preserved the different spellings of waterway names. For example, on page 131 of this Index three different spellings are given of "Potonowut." These different names are listed herein.

The different names or titles given waterways have also been preserved. On page 318 of this Index "Smyrna River" is listed also as "Duck Creek," and this waterway is found under both titles in this list.¹

COMPOUND WORDS.—Compound words are listed generally according to the initial of the first or prefix word. For example, Bay Pompadour is listed in the B's. The more generally used prefixes are Bay, Big, Bogue, Broad, East, Fort, Lake, Little, Lower, Middle, New, North, Old, Saint, San, South, Upper, West, White.

¹In the following finding list the class term "river" does not possess a definiteness of meaning found in words like "ocean," "lake," "bay," or even "gulf." There is an indiscriminate use of such words as "creek," "bayou," "river," "branch," "brook," and "slough." The reports have used the names popularly given to a waterway, so that the class name does not indicate the physical character of the stream as it might do were something like the following meanings to be applied to the terms referred to:

RIVER.—Streams with channel cross section for at least 1 mile from mouth equal to bearing two of the largest steamships moving side by side. (See Panama Canal dimensions on p. 2571 of this Index.)

CREEK.—Channel cross section for at least 1 mile equal to bearing but one of the largest steamships.

BAYOU.—Channel cross section for at least 1 mile equal to bearing a ship of not more than 100 tons burden.

BRANCH.—Cross section profitable for waterpower.

BROOK.—Cross section not practicable for waterpower.

The addition of Roman numerals following a class term of a stream could indicate its situation with respect to the final receiving body of water. Illustration: Delaware River (I), flows directly into the ocean. Schuylkill River (II), flows into a primary, or into the Delaware. Chicago River (III), flows into the Great Lakes (II), and the latter into the St. Lawrence (I).—J. McC.
